Paddling with Ted Upton

Another lovely day for it, cool but not cold, light breezes. Ideal for canoeing but not, apparently, sailing. There was not a handkerchief to be seen rising up a mast!

11.30am – a civilized hour, sun above the horizon and last night's hangover merely a bad dream.

Began routinely with Peter providing his usual 90 minute safety briefing to which everyone listened with close attention – everyone awake that is, still one out of six isn't bad. When the diatribe was over the evil Old Steerer (and supposed canoe captain) provided a six-word summary of what had heard: "If disaster strikes save Old Ted.'

Off into the dawn's early light and straight(ish) to Pat's Park to survey the area for potential canoe parking possibilities. Straightish because – and I know you will have trouble believing this – the steerer (who shall be nameless to protect the guilty) made an error! Yes, unbelievable as it may sound, an error. The second in 40 years steering. Probably due for retraining. Lulled into a false sense of security by the perfect rhythm of six paddles entering and exiting the water as one he forgot that it was very low water and went coral collecting using the canoe's keel as a dredge. Not recommended in the best canoeing literature.

Then again, there's a good side to even that, it demonstrated how good a crew we had, Peter, our stalwart number one; Nicole number two – a slight problem with the language difference, she comes from Russell Island, but signing worked well; same with Sharon at number four; Marion skilful as always at number four and Stella our experienced number five – a good crew. Oh yes, and some old bugger with a bag over his head to hide his shame sort-of steering at number six.

Waving graciously to the poor buggers stuck ashore we returned to base camp for well-earned chats, drinkies and a lovely luncheon.

Thank you to the crew and thank you to those good souls who helped us to launch in very shallow conditions.

Two million cheers – there is a copyright problem with 'three million',

HOEA,

Old Ted.
